GLOBAL NEWS

- China is seeing a recovery in airline capacity and hotel occupancy taking into account that it is only reliant on domestic tourism at the moment. Airline tracking data shows that from May up to and including May 27, Chinese airlines had completed nearly 200 00 flights with passenger-configured widebody, narrow body and regional aircraft, compared with fewer than 170 000 for carriers based in the United States. China has achieved this because its airlines have recovered to an activity level approximately 35 % below last year, whereas US operators remain 74 % down as a result of passenger collapse. The global stored passenger aircraft fleet has declined slightly to just over 15 000, taking the overall proportion of inactive aircraft down a further percentage point to 57 %
- The recovery in China did not come soon enough to help Trip.com Group Limited who recorded a 1.5 billion yuan \(about \$211 million\) loss from operations in the first quarter of this year. The group reported net revenue of 4,7 billion yuan from January to March, a 42 % drop versus the same period last year. They echo the sentiment above: since mid-April the number of air tickets booked through Trip.com has grown significantly, with ticket sales of scenic spots increasing 94 % month on month and packaged tours including tourist sites and hotels more than doubled from March
